

INT. ABANDONED HOUSE - SUNSET

At exactly 4:16 PM, the police station of Lake Ridgecrest received an anonymous call indicating that a person could be seen at the location of a recent murder of a child and wife. No one had been seen at the crime scene in over a month because of a halt into the investigation after the suicide of the husband which one can say he is obviously guilty but upon his death sworn by the life of his loved ones that someone must've broke in. Although, there was no evidence found of false play of any kind of burglary. No broken glass, No stolen items of value or jewelry, stashed gold or stolen money. His story did just not make sense, but there was no possible way or other motive and alibi that could be explained in court even for the lawyer representing him. 4:42 PM, Two police officers arrive at and approach a shoddy unkept and rundown white porched house, the bulb covered in spiderwebs above them turn on as the sun begins going down.

LT. WEXLER, 45 brown jacket red tie and white shirt with jeans and aviators

PVT. FINSKY, 24 years old leather jacket blue shirt black pants and belt

Stand outside rattling it's caged front door.

LT. WEXLER

Private go check if you see anyone or anything in the window.

PVT. FINSKY

Yes sir.

He forms his hands into binoculars to peek through but it is covered by sheets obscuring his vision barely seeing a figure walk past the living room.

PVT. FINSKY (CONT'D)

Damn... Can't see a thing.

LT. WEXLER

Anyone inside?

PVT. FINSKY

Looks like nothing, but I can't really tell I'm not able to make out shit.

The button from Lt. Wexler holster unbuckles itself. He raises his weapon bracing himself against anything that may lie on the other side of that door. They hear a mere clank of a pot-like noise and becomes a sign reaffirming their own suspicions.

LT. WEXLER

Doesn't seem like nothing. Cover my ass, well go in and secure any necessary hostiles. Could be just teens scoping out the area and screwin around way past their curfew. That van across that street wasn't here before either.

They suddenly burst in with gun and flashlight raised. Scanning the entire first floor. Every step making the old floorboards creek.

LT. WEXLER (CONT'D)

Also be careful, this house is more than 100 years old.

As Pvt. Wexler nods and walks past an old vase accidentally bumping it and shatters it across the antique wood.

PVT. FINSKY

Fuck.

INT. SECOND FLOOR - NIGHT

Suddenly footsteps run across upstairs catching their attention. They both rush to see what is and notice to be leftover film equipment scattered in what seems to be a poor attempt to clean and bail. Scuffles of small chatter are then heard coming from the end of the hall way and Lt. Wexler cocks the gun ammo and bullet chambered in the barrel. They scooch against opposite sides covering both ends of the crappy torn walls. Approaching the bathroom with a finger on the trigger until a dirty curtain is pulled back, revealing a famous news field-reporter JENNIE HAWKINS and her CAMERAMAN are found hiding in the tub.

CAMERAMAN

Wait don't Shoot!

JENNIE HAWKINS

Are you kidding me? Here I thought we were ready to catch the real killer.

PVT. FINSKY

What? If we didn't shoot you, then any killer would've got you by now.

JENNIE HAWKINS

We've been parked outside this house for over a week so far waiting to see if we could get anything else on the murder of James and Margaret Caldwell.

LT. WEXLER

So then that makes you the one that called it in?

PVT. FINSKY

Which also explains the van.

CAMERAMAN

Yes, last night a small window of the basement lights turned on we waited to see if anyone would come out...

JENNIE HAWKINS

Since no one did, we took it upon ourselves to come in.

LT. WEXLER

Real stupid of you.

More sound comes from downstairs this time.

PVT. FINSKY

Anyone else with you?

Both the reporter and the cameraman look at each other and say otherwise. Wexler then has to no choice but to seal his trust in Pvt. Finsky.

OK. Stay here with them, I'll be right back.

Wexler disappears into the darkness as they're left behind anticipating his return; hours go by and still nothing. All of them on the start getting anxious with stomachs starting to growl from waiting for so long.

JENNIE HAWKINS

It doesn't seem right that is the only reason we're here. If we're right about this, then the Caldwell family can rest in peace.

The Recruit doesn't seem to disagree with her and also realizes they're wasting time waiting around so decides to get up and pursue looking through the rest of the house with only the reporter because the cameraman ends up chickening out.
